

Past Lives and the Oldest Profession

Toni Reilly regales us with how our Past Lives can and do inSpire us in this life.

If you have a perception of what Past Life Regression is, you might find it to be different. Some have told me it is dredging up the past, and ask why you would do that, with the rationale to leave the past in the past. It is far from dredging up the past just for the sake of it.

Regression targets the core incident or experience which attributes or is responsible for triggering behaviours, feelings, fears, reactions or physical symptoms which do not make sense. During regression some go to earlier in current life, others go into the between life phase which is when our soul is not in a body and find their answers there. These areas are as valid as finding healing within in a past life. In each issue of inSpirit I'll talk about cases which have experienced profound results using past life regression.

The reason that past life therapy is so efficient for healing is because each person who delves and discovers past memories can rest assured that the soul, their higher-self, has guided them to the event or experience which holds insight and answers they are seeking.

This issue of inSpirit Magazine is featured around the divine feminine, and to look at this within past lives I want to talk about the oldest profession. It comes up at times during regression. I have had clients tell me that they work as a dancing girl, a working girl, a prostitute or in a harem, and not once has the issue for them related to the fact that they survived by use of their feminine charms.

In a case where my client said she worked in a saloon as a prostitute, we explored what that was like for her - she was happy; and she had good friends, singing, dancing, drinking and partying and leading a merry life. Charming the men who passed through was not degrading for her - she told me it was fun, she enjoyed her life. In her case we did not discover any mistreatment and she did not feel disrespected or ashamed of herself. In fact, she was well off and able to support herself and family members by entertaining those who sought her feminine charms.

Her issue began when she fell in love with a man. He did not want her working with other men and insisted she stop and lead her life as his dutiful wife.

Her husband forced her to behave as he wanted her to and that did not include frolicking with friends and certainly not as a party girl, flirting with or entertaining other men. The marriage turned sour, leaving her trapped in a desperately unhappy life of physical and emotional abuse. Her husband claimed she owed him for saving her from her dreadful life. She felt obligated to his demands, his expectations of how she should behave and the rest of her life was miserable. Her oppression was not from her life as a working girl but from living a lie, and denying the fun loving side of herself - the social side, the girl who loved being with her friends, the girl whom she really was.

My client came searching for why she stayed in an oppressive and unfulfilling relationship with her husband in current life. She understood that her lesson in the past life was to learn how it felt to be controlled by another, to lose her sense of personal value, to live for someone else, and endurance, and that she did not have to relive those circumstances this time around. Following the session my client felt empowered to alter her current situation.

Regardless of your choice of career, nurture yourself, be the person you really are. Bending and swaying in a way that someone else expects is denying yourself the freedom to be the real you. Women, by nature, are usually innately soft hearted and we mother and nurture. That is the essence of feminine energy. You will benefit from directing your divine femininity at yourself as you need nurturing, kindness and acceptance, and this applies to both men and women as we all have a degree of soft feminine energy within us.
